OUT OF THE ORDINARY.

STRANDED CHORUS GIRLS ON JURY.

Two stranded chorus singers of the defunct Manhattan Beach Opera company earned two days' pay at the courthouse, Denver, Colorado, by serving on juries. They were Miss Katherine Dalton and Miss Edith Wither. They visited the courthouse with the object of selling tickets to a benefit arranged to furnish funds to pay their way back to New York.

Constable Philbin of Justice Hynes' court offered them a chance to serve on a jury and they accepted. The blushing choruses were led into the presence of the court. Justice Hynes asked the respective counsel if they had any objections, and they both gallantly waived their privileges. When the news was carried around the stuffy little courtroom beamed and packed with an interesting audience. The case occupied about an hour, and a verdict was returned. Then warrants were drawn for the fees and the pretty jurors returned and sold a score of tickets to the judge.

HORSE TRIED TO DESTROY AN AUTO.

Carl Meyer, of Fort Wayne, Ind., was on his way to Blue Lake, and was accompanied by a friend in an automobile. Near Churubusco they met two farmers in a buckboard. The horse seemed to be badly frightened, and the machine was stopped and the farmers told to go ahead. Instead they expressed confidence in their ability to manage the animal and invited the occupants of the automobile to migrate to a warmer climate.

Meyer moved his machine cautiously forward, and the horse came abreast of the horse it plunged and kicked until it was free from the harness, and then deliberately turned and kicked viciously at the machine, which was started ahead, the horse following and turning frequently to kick. Finally the horse ran ahead and kicked the headlight off, doing serious damage to the front of the machine. Amused and also frightened by the queer antics of the horse, the occupants of the auto drove it past and kept out of the way of the thoroughly aroused equine, which ran about several miles, eventually bent on the complete destruction of the machine.

REFORMED BY CASTOR OIL.

When Giuseppe Culabressa, 18 years old, of 35 Stanton street, was brought before Magistrate Cornell in New York the other day, charged with attempting to kill himself, the boy's mother rushed over the rail around the prisoners' enclosure and grabbed her son's ears.

He cried bitterly, and she only released her grip when a policeman forced her into a seat.

Sunday afternoon the boy went into the drugstore of Solomon Rosenblatt and shouted to Rosenblatt: "I am tired of living and am better off out of the world than in it. Sell me 10 cents worth of poison so I can drink it right and die."

Rosenblatt gave the boy a dose of castor oil and then sent for a policeman.

"I don't want to kill myself any more," said the boy to the magistrate yesterday. "Let me go home wid me mudder."

"Why did you want to kill yourself?" asked the magistrate.

"I didn't want to. I was only fooling," was the answer.

A NEW JERSEY ROMANCE.

At first sight, North Vineland, N. J., is now awash with jollification over the wedding of two of its most aged folk, James Mason, 75, and Mrs. Deborah J. Bigelow, 76. Each has grandchildren. The bride is a great-grandmother. Hardly any one dreamed that the aged couple were to get married except their grandchildren, who raised a vigorous protest. But the other night at the residence of Rev. A. Matthews, of Vineland, they were quietly married. When they returned in white and confessed what they had done, their relatives wisely made the best of the situation by granting forgiveness and arranging for an elaborate reception the next night. The whole village attended. The bride, beaming with smiles, was attired in white and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridegroom was dressed in black. The bridegroom was dressed in black. The bridegroom was dressed in black.

BURIED WEARING A RED NECKTIE.

J. Howard Jacobs, one of the leading criminal lawyers of Eastern Pennsylvania, who died at Reading a short time ago, was buried wearing a red necktie. Many visitors to the house of the dead lawyer inquired after the funeral why a light-colored business suit and a scarlet neck scarf were used instead of a shroud. A near friend of the family explained as follows:

"Jacobs was best known to all the people wearing a light-colored suit and a red tie. For this reason it was deemed best to bury him in that attire, rather than in a shroud that makes dead men look so very uninteresting."

"Jacobs started this fad a dozen years ago, just after he had won an important case in court. The evidence and the charge of the court seemed against him, yet he unexpectedly secured a verdict. During the long trial he wore a red tie for the first time in court. After the verdict one of the opposing lawyers said:

"Jacobs, that tie of yours hoodooed the jury. You had better keep it up in all your important cases."

"The lawyer took this advice and ever afterward when in a murder case or any other important trial wore a flaring red tie. He never lost a case when wearing a red tie, and as he has now gone to a higher court he has all hope that with his red tie on, he will not lose his case there."
